Analyst Summary

Market Overview

U.S. equities sold off Monday as semiconductor and broader technology stocks came under pressure, with the Nasdaq 100 leading losses with a 1.88% decline. The S&P 500 fell 0.79%, while the Dow Jones held up relatively better, dropping just 0.26%. The VIX surged 14.17% to 17.16, reflecting a pickup in risk aversion that accompanied the tech-heavy selloff.

Semiconductor Rout Drives Tech Weakness

The session was dominated by severe weakness across the semiconductor complex, with memory chip stocks bearing the brunt of the selling. Micron plunged 4.32%, SanDisk cratered 12.63%, and AMD declined 4.21%. Reports suggest the volatility was imported from SK Hynix, creating contagion across memory and chip stocks. Intel dropped 6.12%, while Broadcom and Arm Holdings fell 3.98% and 7.55%, respectively. Nvidia, a bellwether for AI infrastructure, declined 3.52%.

Sector data confirms the breadth of the damage: memory stocks fell 5.05%, semiconductors dropped 3.75%, and networking names declined 3.98%. Put/call ratios in memory reached 1.22 with short interest at 5.3%, signaling "conviction selling" and heightened hedging demand. Elsewhere in the chip complex, however, positioning data suggests the decline came without significant panic, as put/call ratios remained subdued despite sharp price declines.

Divergence in Mega-Cap Tech

Not all technology names suffered equally. Microsoft bucked the trend with a 1.53% gain, while Amazon and Apple posted modest advances of 0.80% and 0.63%, respectively. Meanwhile, SaaS stocks rallied strongly, up 2.75% as a sector with 78% breadth, providing a rare bright spot in an otherwise weak technology landscape.

Standout Gainers and Cross-Asset Signals

Outside of tech, Figma led market gainers with a 12.03% surge, followed by Northern Oil and Gas (+9.94%), Robert Half (+9.85%), Venture Global (+9.15%), and Atlassian (+8.22%). The gains in energy-related names come amid reports that global oil prices topped $83 per barrel—the biggest jump in six years—following reports of renewed tensions in the Strait of Hormuz.

In rates markets, the 10-year Treasury yield rose 4 basis points to 4.61%, while the dollar strengthened against the euro and pound. Fed Governor Waller's recent comments warning that rate hikes remain possible appeared to weigh on sentiment, with market chatter suggesting odds of a July rate hike are rising. Gold edged 0.17% higher to $4,012, while Bitcoin fell 2.73%.

The divergence between defensively positioned SaaS and collapsing hardware/semiconductor names, alongside rising yields and a stronger dollar, suggests investors are re-evaluating growth expectations and rotating toward quality amid monetary policy uncertainty.
