Bloomberg News Summary

Stocks & Bonds Rose as US-Iran Hopes Spur Oil Drop | The Close 8/3/2026 (aired 2026-08-03) · Full-transcript summary · watch on YouTube

Key takeaways

Stocks rallied for third straight day with S&P 500 up 1.5% to 7,600, reclaiming all key moving averages after recent momentum selloff. Nasdaq jumped 2% as hyperscalers regained strength following earnings beats. Drop in oil prices (down 5% on day) and Treasury yields aided the advance.

Fed credibility concerns linger following Chair Warsh's meeting last week. Bond market spiked volatility to highest since financial crisis as demand for puts surged. Interest rate options positioning shows consensus expecting higher yields ahead despite today's decline.

US-Iran diplomacy hopes drove crude oil selloff, pressuring energy stocks like Chevron (down 2%) while benefiting airlines and transports. Manufacturing data showed factory activity surging to highest since 2022 with first employment gains since 2023.

AI trade regaining momentum after valuations reset. Amazon crossed $3 trillion market cap (up 25% in three days), while Boeing surged 8% on 737 MAX-7 FAA certification. Morgan Stanley's Mike Wilson cited "large player exit" as endpoint for momentum unwind, expects rotation to quality stocks with stable earnings.

Analyst Summary

Broad Rally Lifts Equities as Tech Mega-Caps Surge

U.S. equities posted strong gains for a third consecutive session on August 4, with the S&P 500 advancing 1.48% to 7,600.50 and the Nasdaq 100 jumping 1.78%. The rally was broad-based, with the Russell 2000 climbing 1.73%, while the VIX edged lower to 15.86, signaling improved risk sentiment. The advance comes as markets continue to digest recent momentum unwinds and recalibrate following volatility surrounding Fed Chair Warsh's recent communications.

Big Tech Leads the Charge

Technology mega-caps powered the session, with hyperscalers and cloud infrastructure names posting outsized gains. Meta surged 6.02%, while Microsoft climbed 4.93%—capping a run not seen in 26 years and erasing its year-to-date losses. Alphabet added 4.44%, and Amazon gained 4.58% after crossing the $3 trillion market cap milestone earlier in the week. Nvidia rose 2.93%, and SanDisk soared 6.03%, underscoring the AI trade's renewed momentum following the recent valuation reset.

Coherent stood out among semiconductor-related names, surging 9.60%, while Applied Optoelectronics jumped 16.85%. CoreWeave, the AI infrastructure provider, rallied 19.49%, landing among the market's top gainers alongside Atkore (+28.22%) and Polibeli Group (+17.68%). Palantir extended gains in after-hours trading, rising 8% after beating estimates and raising full-year guidance to $8.15–8.16 billion from $7.66 billion.

Apple bucked the trend, falling 1.78%, though the weakness was largely isolated. The Hyperscalers & Neoclouds sector outperformed the Nasdaq by 6.02%, with 64% breadth, while SaaS names also showed strength (+2.10% vs. Nasdaq, 89% breadth).

Cross-Asset Signals Point to De-escalation and Fed Caution

The 10-year Treasury yield declined 6 basis points to 4.69%, reflecting a modest flight to safety and easing inflation expectations amid hopes for U.S.-Iran diplomatic progress. These geopolitical developments helped drive crude oil 0.83% higher to $81.01, though energy stocks lagged. Gold gained 0.36% to $4,105.10, while Bitcoin edged up 0.39% to $63,379.27 despite mixed sentiment around regulatory developments.

Fed credibility remains a lingering concern following Chair Warsh's recent meeting, with bond market volatility spiking and demand for rate options positioning for higher yields ahead. However, today's Treasury rally suggests some near-term reprieve. The dollar firmed modestly against the yen (+0.23%) but was little changed against the euro and pound.

Outlook

Sector leadership remains tilted toward AI infrastructure and cloud platforms, with positioning data showing low put/call ratios (0.67 for hyperscalers, 0.57 for SaaS) consistent with bullish sentiment. Manufacturing data last week showed factory activity at its highest since 2022, supporting the broader risk-on tone. Upcoming July jobs data, expected to come in slightly cooler per Kalshi trader positioning, will be closely watched for implications on Fed policy trajectory.
