Analyst Summary

Semiconductor Rally Powers Broad Market Gains

U.S. equities surged Friday, with the Nasdaq 100 jumping 3.29% as semiconductor and memory stocks staged a powerful rally. The S&P 500 advanced 1.75% and the Dow gained 1.86%, while the Russell 2000 climbed 3.02%, suggesting broad risk appetite. The VIX declined 2.67% to 18.92, reflecting easing near-term volatility concerns.

Memory and Chip Stocks Lead the Charge

The semiconductor sector, particularly memory producers, delivered explosive gains in what appears to be a short-squeeze-fueled rebound. SanDisk soared 14.50%, the standout among major chip names, while Micron surged 11.66% and Arm gained 11.32%. Intel rallied 9.27%, and AMD climbed 7.97%. Positioning data confirms the short-squeeze narrative: the Memory sector showed a put/call ratio of 2.31 with 7.1% short float, indicating heavy bearish positioning unwinding violently as prices surged 9.83% on the day.

Networking and compute semiconductors also rallied sharply, with Broadcom up 3.62% and Nvidia gaining 2.22%. Breadth was exceptional, with 100% of memory stocks advancing and 65% of compute/semiconductor names in the green. Hyperscalers lagged, however, with Microsoft down 1.77% and Meta off 0.45%, suggesting selectivity within tech.

SpaceX IPO Dominates Headlines

Market attention centered on SpaceX's record-setting $75 billion IPO at a $135 share price, crowning Elon Musk the world's first trillionaire according to headlines. However, retail allocation was reportedly cut to the low 20% range, sparking frustration. Space-related equities surged: York Space Systems (YSS) jumped 22.09%, ViaSat gained 18.23%, and Firefly Aerospace rallied 17.80%. JPMorgan noted the upside for banks from mega-IPO activity. Rocket Lab is set to join the Nasdaq 100 in the quarterly rebalance, with SpaceX inclusion anticipated.

Inflation Data and Cross-Asset Signals

May PPI came in white-hot at 1.1% month-over-month and 6.5% year-over-year, yet Treasury yields declined, with the 10-year falling 8 basis points to 4.46%. This counterintuitive move may reflect Fed policy expectations or flight-to-safety flows amid geopolitical developments. Gold rallied 2.85% despite CNBC reporting a 6-month low earlier in the week, while crude oil dropped 3.82% as reports indicated Iran won't restore Strait of Hormuz shipping to prewar levels. Bitcoin edged 1.12% higher.

Banking stocks advanced 1.42% with 100% breadth and a bullish regime score, though the elevated 3.01 put/call ratio suggests investors remain heavily hedged despite the rally.
