Analyst Summary

Market Overview

U.S. equities declined on June 3, with the S&P 500 down 0.52%, the Dow falling 0.79%, and the Russell 2000 losing 0.96%. The Nasdaq 100 showed relative resilience, dropping just 0.27% as tech sector performance diverged sharply. The VIX edged up 2.09% to 16.10, reflecting modestly elevated caution amid uneven sector performance.

Fed and Macro Backdrop

The Federal Reserve released minutes from recent FOMC meetings and discount rate discussions, though no immediate policy changes were announced. The 10-year Treasury yield rose 3 basis points to 4.48%, while the 2-year remained flat at 3.84%, suggesting investors are processing persistent inflation concerns. Crude oil surged 2.14% to $95.77, reflecting ongoing geopolitical tensions and supply concerns—a development that could complicate the Fed's inflation outlook. Gold dipped 0.33%, while Bitcoin fell 0.73% to $66,216, as some analysts noted crypto investors "rage quitting" amid the AI-driven equity rally.

Tech Sector Bifurcation

A notable divide emerged within technology. Hyperscalers struggled, with Microsoft down 3.27%, Amazon off 2.38%, and Nvidia declining 3.06%. This weakness weighed on the broader AI infrastructure narrative. Conversely, semiconductor and memory stocks showed strength: AMD gained 1.96%, Intel surged 3.96%, and SanDisk jumped 4.27%. Meta stood out with a 3.16% gain, bolstered by RBC Capital reiterating its bullish stance on the company's AI opportunities. Marvell Technology reportedly soared in premarket trading after Nvidia's Jensen Huang called it a potential "next trillion-dollar company."

The Memory (DRAM/NAND/HBM) sector rallied 3.08% with 100% breadth, signaling robust demand amid AI memory shortages. Reports highlighted SK Hynix plans to double wafer capacity, underscoring supply constraints.

Standout Movers and Cross-Asset Themes

Among top gainers, Navitas Semiconductor led with an 18.60% surge, followed by Abivax (+15.11%), TG Therapeutics (+10.00%), and IPG Photonics (+9.78%). Victoria's Secret spiked roughly 40% after a strong earnings beat, defying consumer weakness concerns.

The SaaS sector lagged significantly, down 5.34%, as valuations faced pressure amid rising yields and concerns about profitability. Banking also underperformed (-2.01%), reflecting rate-flattening dynamics and economic uncertainty.

Cross-asset signals suggest a rotation within tech—away from high-valuation hyperscalers toward hardware and memory beneficiaries of AI infrastructure spending. Rising oil prices and a stronger dollar (EUR/USD and GBP/USD both down ~0.20%) add to inflation worries, potentially constraining Fed easing expectations. The yen hovered near 160 against the dollar, prompting warnings from Japanese officials about potential intervention.
