Analyst Summary

Divergence Day: Value Outperforms Tech in SpaceX IPO Frenzy

U.S. equities delivered a split verdict on Friday as investors rotated sharply away from technology into cyclical and value sectors. The Dow Jones surged 1.73% and the Russell 2000 gained 1.45%, while the Nasdaq 100 declined 0.53%, creating a notable divergence. The S&P 500 advanced a modest 0.41%, masking significant sector dispersion beneath the surface.

Semiconductor Selloff Weighs on Tech

The headline story was a brutal selloff in memory and semiconductor stocks following disappointing guidance. Broadcom plunged 12.59% after its AI chip sales forecast missed elevated expectations, dragging Micron (-7.74%), AMD (-3.56%), and Arm (-4.47%) lower. SanDisk dropped 3.92% in sympathy. The Memory sector fell 3.52% overall, while the broader Semiconductors/Compute segment declined 2.04%.

Nvidia bucked the trend with a 1.82% gain after CEO Jensen Huang called Marvell "the next trillion-dollar company," though Alphabet's stunning 3.82% rally stole the show following news of a record $85 billion capital raise for Google's AI business. Amazon (+1.51%) and Meta (+0.74%) also advanced, helping Hyperscalers & Neoclouds outperform with a 1.51% gain.

SpaceX IPO Dominates Headlines

The blockbuster SpaceX IPO priced at $135 per share with a $1.77 trillion valuation, making it the largest public offering in history. However, the S&P 500 Index Committee confirmed it will not change inclusion rules for mega-cap IPOs, disappointing speculation about fast-track entry. The event appeared to trigger risk-off positioning, with some analysts questioning whether the mega-IPO marks a market top. Bitcoin fell 1.27% to $62,722, with traders eyeing further downside.

Defensive Rotation and Rate Stability

Banking (+3.94%), Pharma/Healthcare (+3.52%), and SaaS (+0.85%) sectors outperformed, suggesting a defensive tilt. The 10-year Treasury yield edged down 1 basis point to 4.48%, while the VIX ticked up 2.86% to 15.84—modest but notable given the equity advance. Headlines noting new Fed Chair Warsh's first hires, including a "Project 2025" author, drew attention but markets showed limited immediate reaction.

Standout Movers

Among top gainers, ChronoScale Corporation soared 22.69% and Abivax SA jumped 16.39%, while Redwire Corporation and Oscar Health each gained over 15%. CrowdStrike beat estimates but fell after hours despite announcing a 4-for-1 split and hiring a former Nvidia executive as AI officer.
