Analyst Summary

Market Overview

U.S. equities retreated on Thursday, with technology stocks bearing the brunt of the selloff. The Nasdaq 100 tumbled 1.62%, while the S&P 500 shed 0.51% and the Dow Jones declined 0.20%. The VIX rose 6.76% to 16.73, reflecting heightened investor nervousness concentrated in the tech sector.

Tech Sector Under Pressure

A broad-based selloff hammered semiconductor and AI-related stocks, driven by multiple headwinds. Memory chipmakers suffered the steepest losses, with the sector down 9.57%. SanDisk plunged 12.63%, Micron dropped 5.65%, and Intel fell 5.84%. Reports of a U.S. probe into Samsung for alleged infringement of Netlist's memory-chip patents added to sector uncertainty, while Taiwan's TSMC announced a $100 billion U.S. expansion that may have raised competitive concerns.

The broader semiconductor complex saw similarly sharp declines: AMD fell 5.33%, Broadcom dropped 5.03%, and Arm lost 5.41%. Nvidia declined 2.40%, while Coherent tumbled 7.49%. Networking and hyperscaler stocks also underperformed, down 6.09% and 4.44% respectively. Notably, positioning data showed put/call ratios remained subdued across chip sectors, suggesting the decline lacked panic-driven hedging demand—a potentially concerning sign if selling intensifies.

Alphabet tumbled 4.43% amid reports that Gemini delays indicate Google is struggling to maintain pace in the AI race. Meta lost 2.46% and Amazon fell 1.99%. Bright spots included Microsoft (+1.38%) and Apple (+1.76%), which bucked the tech downdraft.

Divergent Leadership

Defensive sectors outperformed sharply. Healthcare and pharma rallied 2.17%, while consumer stocks surged 3.10%, both showing bullish positioning. Top daily gainers included CareDx (+35.60%), AtaiBeckley (+33.40%), and staffing firms ManpowerGroup (+32.37%) and Robert Half (+12.62%), suggesting potential labor market optimism.

Macro and Cross-Asset Signals

Dallas Fed President Logan's call for "modestly higher" rates pressured duration, pushing the 10-year Treasury yield up 2 basis points to 4.57%. The dollar strengthened modestly against the euro and pound, while crude oil gained nearly 1% to $79.05. Gold slipped 0.33%, and Bitcoin declined 1.29%, indicating broad risk-off sentiment in growth assets while cyclicals held up.
