Analyst Summary

Market Overview

U.S. equities delivered a mixed session on July 15, with a sharp bifurcation between mega-cap technology and semiconductor hardware. The S&P 500 gained 0.38%, supported by strength in large-cap internet and software names, while the Nasdaq 100 slipped 0.28% amid heavy selling in memory chips and related infrastructure. The Dow rose 0.29%, and the Russell 2000 added 0.39%, extending its recent outperformance. The VIX dropped 5% to 15.67, signaling muted concern despite intraday volatility in select sectors.

Inflation Data and Fed Developments

Wholesale prices unexpectedly declined 0.3% in June, driven by falling gasoline costs, providing fresh evidence of cooling inflation. The 10-year Treasury yield fell 4 basis points to 4.54%, and the dollar weakened against both the euro and pound as markets recalibrated rate hike expectations. New York Fed President Williams remarked that inflation has peaked and current rates are "well positioned." Meanwhile, Fed Chairman Kevin Warsh's testimony to the Senate Banking Committee drew attention; Warren Buffett publicly endorsed Warsh as a "good choice," adding credibility to the new leadership.

Technology: A Tale of Two Stacks

The session underscored a dramatic rotation within tech. Hyperscalers surged, with Apple up 4.01%, Alphabet gaining 3.60%, Meta advancing 3.07%, Microsoft climbing 2.78%, and Amazon rising 3.02%. Reports that Goldman Sachs and JPMorgan are benefiting as "new winners" of the AI boom—likely through investment banking tied to Anthropic's anticipated mega-IPO—further lifted sentiment around AI infrastructure buyers.

In stark contrast, memory chip makers collapsed. Micron plunged 8.02%, SanDisk tumbled 8.12%, and AMD fell 3.46%. The Memory sector dropped 8.07%, with 0% breadth and deeply bearish positioning (put/call ratio of 0.69). Intel shed 4.43%, and Networking/Interconnect names fell 5.83%, reflecting concerns about inventory or demand normalization despite ASML's upbeat sales forecast.

Standout Movers

Among top gainers, Lucid Group surged 28.79% and ChronoScale jumped 28.77%, while Aehr Test Systems rallied 21.91%. PayPal soared 17.20% on reports that Stripe and Advent have offered to acquire the company, catalyzing a sharp revaluation. SpaceX shares fell below their IPO price for the first time, weighing on sentiment in speculative growth pockets.

Cross-Asset Signals

Gold edged up 0.42% to $4,068.70, benefiting from softer inflation data and modest haven demand amid U.S.-Iran tensions. Crude oil gained 0.80%, and Bitcoin rose marginally. The bond market's rally and currency weakness reinforce expectations that the Fed's tightening cycle may be nearing an end, a tailwind for rate-sensitive equities and a headwind for the dollar.
