Analyst Summary

Market Overview

U.S. equities displayed sharp divergence on Friday, with traditional blue-chips rallying while tech-heavy indices faltered. The Dow Jones surged 1.73% and the Russell 2000 gained 1.45%, while the Nasdaq 100 declined 0.53%. The S&P 500 edged up 0.41%, masking significant internal rotation beneath the surface. The VIX ticked 2% higher to 15.71, reflecting modest caution amid shifting market leadership.

Semiconductor Rout Drags Tech

A brutal selloff in semiconductor stocks weighed heavily on the tech sector. Broadcom plunged 12.59% despite delivering an AI-fueled beat-and-raise quarter, signaling potential valuation concerns or profit-taking after a strong run. Micron tumbled 7.74%, while AMD fell 3.56%, Arm declined 4.47%, and SanDisk dropped 3.92%. The Memory sector fell 3.52%, with 100% breadth to the downside, while the broader Semiconductors/Compute segment declined 2.04%. Despite the chip wreckage, mega-cap survivors included Nvidia (+1.82%) and Alphabet (+3.82%), which rallied even as investors digested news of its massive $84.75 billion AI infrastructure equity raise announced earlier in the week.

Standout Gainers and Sector Rotation

Top gainers reflected idiosyncratic strength: ChronoScale Corporation (CHRN) soared 22.69%, Abivax SA (ABVX) jumped 16.39%, and Oscar Health (OSCR) and Redwire Corporation (RDW) both climbed over 15%. Banking stocks led sector performance with a 3.94% advance, exhibiting 96% breadth and bullish sentiment. Pharma/Healthcare also rallied 3.52%, while Hyperscalers & Neoclouds gained 1.51% as cloud infrastructure plays outperformed. Consumer stocks lagged with 17% breadth, underscoring defensive rotation away from discretionary spending.

SpaceX IPO and Policy Developments

Market chatter centered on SpaceX's upcoming Nasdaq debut, with the company pricing 555.6 million shares at $135 for a $1.77 trillion valuation—though analysts including Morningstar have questioned whether the true value is less than half that figure. The S&P 500 Index Committee confirmed it will not change inclusion rules to fast-track mega-cap IPOs, a "wild twist" that surprised market participants expecting expedited entry for SpaceX and similar mega-listings.

On the policy front, new Fed Chair Warsh made his first hires, including a "Project 2025" author, signaling potential shifts in the central bank's approach, though no immediate rate changes were announced.

Cross-Asset Signals

Crude oil fell 1.30% and Bitcoin declined 1.61% to $62,517, with crypto bears citing further downside risk. The 10-year Treasury yield dipped slightly to 4.48%, offering mild support to risk assets. Gold slipped 0.29%. Currency markets were quiet, with EUR/USD and GBP/USD barely budging.
